PREFACE

It is difficult, perhaps even impossible, to read and to study a book at the same time. To read is to move with some freedom and confidence along the path of the author's mind. To study is to call a halt and to scrutinize the trail more closely. The balance between reading and studying is determined by the ability, taste, knowledge, and purpose of the reader. When, however, the reader is under direction, as in a school, it is necessary to decide, if there is to be any such balance, how it shall be secured. There was a time when the question was settled almost always by the temperament or mood of the person responsible for directing the attention of the reader. To-day there is a more critical approach to the question. "Some books," said Bacon, "are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested." But if this is true of books, it is equally true, at any rate so far as young readers are concerned, of passages within books.

This series aims at helping readers by focusing their attention, either at long range or at closer range, upon questions which, it is hoped, will enrich their acquaintance with the book. For this purpose the questions at the back of the books are of two kinds. Those under the heading General Study deal with the larger problems of character, incident, style, and content of the book; whereas those of the second kind focus the reader's attention upon a short passage, treated as a self-contained unit, and are designed to help the study of sentence and paragraph construction. It has been thought useful to include lists of words which the young reader will meet in the text, and which may perhaps give difficulty. These lists, with the aid of a dictionary and such exercises as a teacher may care to invent, should enlarge the vocabulary by giving at least some chance of distinguishing between words merely met and words mastered.

No attempt has been made in these questions to deal with every point that may be thought to offer difficulty to the reader. They have not been designed as a substitute for such books of reference as should normally be available in all schools. An occasional footnote has been added, but in the main the purpose of this series is to stimulate an interested reading of the book, not to offer explanations. It is hoped that the questions will help the reader to appreciate the book as a whole and to become conscious in some degree of the craftsmanship of its parts.

In England, I must thank Lord Carlisle once more for the loan and gift of books, and also Lady Mary Murray. Lady Agatha Russell and Mr. Rollo Russell, Miss Pearn, Miss Margaret Shaen, Mr. Charles Lacaita, Mr. Arthur Eliot, Mr. Herbert Craig, Lady Lockwood, Mrs. Osler, and Mr. Malleson have all put family papers at my disposal. I must also thank Sir Cecil Spring Rice, Mr. Marchetti of Halifax (Garibaldino of 1859), and others whose names occur in the notes and appendices of this volume.

Four persons have been at the pains to read the volume in MS. or in proof—Mr. Hilton Young; my wife; Mr. Thayer of Harvard, one of the foremost scholars of Risorgimento history; and Count Ugo Balzani, whose inexhaustible kindness to me is one of the many reasons why it is so pleasant to be often called to visit Italy.

NOTE TO THE PRESENT EDITION

As this work was thoroughly revised when the eleventh edition was issued in 1910, I have made only a few minor alterations in the text, particularly in Chapter I which was left untouched in the previous revision. The most striking passages in the last chapter of the original work have been incorporated in the last chapter of this new edition.

The additional chapters, XIX, XX, and XXI, deal with history since the early days of the nineteenth century. "To give an account of modern conditions," wrote Townsend Warner, "would be beyond the scope of this book." In attempting to do what he deliberately refrained from doing, I have found it difficult to follow the plan, or preserve the simplicity and clarity, of his work; nevertheless I have endeavoured to select what seemed to be the outstanding landmarks of the period and to build the narrative round these.

arrangement, I have not thought it necessary to burden the text with numerous foot-notes of reference to authorities. To two books in particular I owe much, and it is right that I should make special mention of them. They are Cunningham's Growth of English Industry and Commerce and Ashley's Economic History.

It only remains for me to express my thanks to those who have helped me; and especially to the Rev. W. Cunningham, D.D., who has assisted me with numerous suggestions and criticisms.

NOTE TO THE ELEVENTH EDITION

In issuing another edition opportunity has been taken to make a complete revision. The last chapter stands as it was written in 1898 before the present controversy began; but in the rest of the book, some mistakes in detail have been corrected, and considerable alterations have been made in Chapters III, VI, and X in order to include some of the results of recent investigation. For these improvements I am indebted to Mr. F. R. Salter of Magdalene College, Cambridge, who has gone over the whole book in detail. Mr. R. Vere Laurence has also been kind enough to make some valuable suggestions. To him and Mr. Salter my best thanks are due.
